May 19, 2011

The Clear Channel produced "Green is Good" radio show has announced its "sustainability rock star" roster of guests for June, revealing a broad selection of leading green businesses and organizations, each taking unique measures to protect our planet.

The weekly interview program, co-hosted by John Shegerian (Chairman and CEO of Electronic Recyclers International, the nation's leading recycler of electronic waste), and radio veteran Mike Brady, is the #1 green themed radio show in the country. The program is also available for free on iTunes as a podcast.

Coming up in the next several episodes of Green is Good are spokespeople from businesses with green initiatives such as General Motors, Pitney Bowes, Travelocity and Honest Tea. Other recent guests have included the Audubon Society, Greenstar Recycling, NRDC scientist Allen Hershkowitz and actress Patricia Arquette.

In each show, Shegerian and Brady draw their guests into discussions about the environment and what businesses and individuals can do each day to live lives that follow the major tenets of sustainability – people, planet and profits.

"Since shortly after we launched the show, we've been the number one green radio program in the country, inspiring listeners to think and act in more responsible and sustainable ways," said Shegerian. "We're very honored and humbled that we are able to attract some of the world's most significant brands such as Ford, Panasonic, Coors, Lipton Tea and many other opinion leaders, green organizations and nonprofits that work every day to provide new ways to benefit our planet."
